QUESTIONS PRESENTED

WHERE A GRAND JURY WHICH IS NOT IMPANELED ACCORDING TO LAW RETURNS A CRIMINAL INDICTMENT, DOES THE SUBSEQUENT TRIAL AND CONVICTION OF A DEFENDANT UPON SUCH INDICTMENT DEPRIVE SUCH DEFENDANT OF DUE PROCESS OF LAW AS GUARANTEED BY THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On the 1st day of June, 1962, the Grand Jury for the May Term of 1962, that was under summons to appear for duty on Monday, the 4th day of June, 1962, was by order of the Honorable Lowell C. Thompson, discontinued for the recited reason in said entry, that it was unnecessary that said Grand Jury appear for the reason that a Special Grand Jury had been ordered due to the needs of public business. (See Appendix D.) On the same day, June 1, 1962, said Judge by general entry of that date, ordered the Clerk of the Common Pleas Court to draw from the jury wheel, the names of 16 persons to serve as a Special Grand Jury and that they be directed to appear before the Court of Common Pleas of said county on the 6th day of June, 1962, at 9:30 A.M. (See Appendix E.) Thereafter, said body convened and on the 3rd day of July, 1962, among other findings returned indictment in this cause against the defendant, charging in Three Counts—the use of a false and fictitious name in an application for a Certificate of Title to a certain motor vehicle, the giving of a false and fictitious address in such application and the forgery of an assignment of certificate of title to a certain motor vehicle—all in violation of Section 4505.19 of the Revised Code of Ohio.

The defendant, James O. Phipps, filed separate special pleas to the alleged indictment objecting to the jurisdiction of the Common Pleas Court as to the subject matter set out in the alleged indictment on the ground that the alleged Special Grand Jury had no legal existence. The Honorable Thomas Mitchell who was under asignment as Judge of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County, Ohio, ruled that the objections thus raised were not jurisdictional and ordered this cause assigned for trial, after plea of not guilty by the defendant.

Thereafter, the defendant, James O. Phipps, with two other defendants in separate criminal causes, petitioned the Supreme Court of Ohio for a Writ of Prohibition asking that the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County, Ohio, be restrained from proceeding with this cause for want of jurisdiction in respect to the subject matter contained in the present indictment by reason of the contention of defendant that the alleged Special Grand Jury never had any legal existence. The Supreme Court allowed a temporary Writ of Prohibition and thereafter a demurrer was filed by the Honorable Lowell C. Thompson, one of the resident Judges of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County, Ohio. Judge Mitchell, as Judge of said Court by assignment, also demurred to the petition. After hearing, the Supreme Court sustained the demurrer on the grounds that this defendant and the others, joining as relators, had an adequate remedy by way of appeal, and stated in their Per Curiam opinion that:

> "This Court will ordinarily in the exercise of its discretion deny a Writ of Prohibition where relator has an adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law."

The within cause was then again assigned for trial in the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County, Ohio, with the Honorable Judge Thomas Mitchell presiding. The defendant was found guilty, after jury trial, on all Three Counts contained in said indictment and defendant was sentenced to incarceration.

The stipulation contained in Appendix F was made a part of the record.

An appeal was perfected to the Court of Appeals for Scioto County, Ohio. That Court affirmed the trial court. (See Appendix A.) Thereupon an appeal as of right and a motion for leave to appeal were filed with the Ohio Supreme Court. In the Ohio Supreme Court, both the Ohio Constitutional and the United States Constitutional questions were argued, but both appeals were dismissed. (See Appendix B.) A motion for rehearing was denied. (See Appendix C.)

The Supreme Court of Ohio dismissed the appeal for the reason the case contains no debatable constitutional question.

REASON FOR GRANTING THIS WRIT

The Supreme Court of the State of Ohio, by dismissing the appeal of this petitioner, has, upon execution of his sentence, deprived the petitioner of his liberty without due process of law.

ARGUMENT

The argument in this case is a relatively simple but a basically fundamental one. The question presented appears, after extensive research, to be one of first impression for this Honorable Court. For the purpose of argument, it is presented in two segments:

I. If the petitioner was convicted and sentenced upon an indictment returned by a grand jury which was not legally constitutited, was he deprived of due process of law?

II. If so, was the grand jury in question legally constituted?

We respectfully submit the answer to the first question is in the affirmative and the answer to the second question is in the negative.

The pertinent portion of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, Section 1, Clause 3, provides:

"Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, of property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The Constitution of the State of Ohio, in Article 1, Section 10, (see Appendix G), provides in pertinent part that:

" no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law."

If an individual has a constitutional right to be held to answer for an infamous crime only upon a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, it would seem to follow as a necessary corollary that he has a constitutional right to be indicted by a legally constituted grand jury.

In Reece v. Georgia, 350 U.S. 85, on a question of selection of individual members of a grand jury, this Honorable Court stated:

"This Court over the past 50 years has adhered to the view that valid grand jury selection is a constitutionally protected right."

Does it not go without saying that the impaneling of an entire grand jury should be as much, if not more, constitutionally protected?

The highest Courts of at least two states have passed upon this question in general terms.

In State v. Doherty, 60 Maine 504 (1872), in discussing a venire drawn by a court without authority and a statutory attempt to validate the proceedings, stated: "A statute purporting to confirm and make valid court proceedings on indictments found by a grand jury not legally drawn, impaneled, and sworn is in contravention of this clause as depriving persons of liberty without due process."

"If the respondent had been tried, convicted, sentenced, and imprisoned under this indictment, it is clear that he would have been deprived of his librty without due process of law and contrary to the law of the land."

In Louisana, it has been held:

"'The proper administration of justice requires impartial and unobstructed conduct at every phase of the criminal process, including the proceedings in the grand jury sessions.  Since he (the accused) has no right in so far as that body is concerned except the right to have it duly impaneled and conducted according to law, his right in this respect should be rigorously protected." (Parenthetical matter added). State of Louisana v. Revere, 232 La. 134, 94 So. (2d) 25 at page 31.

The case most directly in point which we have been able to find arose in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in 1964 and is cited as United States of America vs. Wallace and Tiernan Inc., et al., 234 Fed. Supp. 780. In that case, the District Judge who called the grand jury allegedly did not have the authority to do so, and the Court so held and granted a motion to dismiss the indictment.

In doing so, the Court stated:

"It necessarily follows that the special grand jury which returned the indictment in the instant case was not summoned according to the statutory mandate, but was illegally constituted, and the resulting indictment was a nullity. The right to a lawful grand jury flows directly from the Constitution, and, in the opinion of the Court, violation of the right in these circumstances is prejudicial per se."

We respectfully submit that if the grand jury which returned the indictment upon which the petitioner was tried, convicted, and sentenced was not legally impaneled, then the indictment was a nullity, and the subsequent proceedings thereon clearly and unequivocally deprived him of due process of law.

The other branch of this question is, then:

WAS THE GRAND JURY WHICH INDICTED THE PETITIONER LEGALLY IMPANELED?

Section 2939.17 of the Ohio Revised Code (See Appendix G) has been enacted by the Ohio General Assembly to implement the Ohio Constitution insofar as grand juries are concerned.

It is essential to an understanding of the instant case to differentiate between the two separate—and entirely different—situations which are dealt with by this section in impaneling a new grand jury. There is a statutory condition precedent to each of the two reasons for calling of a new grand jury, neither of which was present in the instant case.

In reverse order so as to quickly dispose of one of the two situations, the second sentence of Section 2939.17 of the Ohio Revised Code specifically provides:

"Whenever the governor or general assembly directs the attorney general to conduct any investigation or prosecution, the court of common pleas or any judge thereof, on written request of the attorney general, shall order a special grand jury to be summoned, and such special grand jury may be called and discharge its duties either before, during, or after any session of the regular grand jury, and its proceedings shall be independent of the proceedings of the regular grand jury of the same force and effect."

There is no contention in the instant case—nor could there be—that the grand jury which returned the indictment upon which petitioner was tried, convicted, and sentenced, was impaneled as a result of the governor or the general assembly directing the attorney general to conduct any investigation or prosecution. The legality of the grand jury which returned the indictment in the instant case therefore stands or falls upon the first sentence of Ohio Revised Code Section 2939.17, which reads as follows:

"After the grand jury is discharged, the court of common pleas, when necessary, may order the drawing and impaneling of a new grand jury, which shall be summoned and returned as provided by section 2939.03 of the Revised Code and shall be sworn and proceed in the manner provided by sections 2939.06 to 2939.24, inclusive, of the Revised Code."

In the instant case the regular grand jury was not discharged. The Court will note from the entry printed herein as Appendix D that the regular grand jury was discontinued "for the reason that a Special Grand Jury has been ordered drawn by this Court due to the needs of public business."

As pointed out before, the condition precedent for the impaneling of a Special Grand Jury upon the direction of the governor or general assembly was not present.

The reason given for "discontinuance" of the regular grand jury was that a Special (new) Grand Jury had been ordered drawn, but a new grand jury may only be statutorily drawn after the (regular) grand jury is discharged. It is self-evident that the condition precedent to calling a new grand jury cannot be given as the reason for "discontinuing" the regular grand jury. See Appendices D, E, F.

The stipulation (Appendix F) provides that the regular grand jury had been "discontinued". It has been expressly held, in State v. Schwab, 109 O.S. 532, that the Court of Common pleas has authority after the disposition of matters pending at the beginning of the term to recess the grand jury for such further business as may arise during the term. Needless to say, the Court also has the inherent power to discharge the grand jury, but it is a prevailing custom to retain the grand jury during the entire period of the term of court, and to discharge it only at the end thereof. Whether the "discontinuance" was a "recess" or a "discharge" is not clear, but if the discontinuance was only a recess, the grand jury and this indictment which it returned, were void ab initio.

In this regard, it has been held also that a challenge to a special grand jury should be sustained where it appeared that immediately after the regular grand jury was discharged a special grand jury was called because the prosecuting attorney felt that some cases he had to present might be more favorably considered by a new jury than they would be by the regular grand jury. See State v. Weible, 25 ONP(NS) 564.

In the instant case, the alleged offense occurred on January 18, 1961; the indictment was returned by a grand jury impaneled on June 6, 1962 after the discontinuance of the regular grand jury on June 1, 1962.

Another important point to which we direct the Court's attention is the difference in language used by the Ohio legislature with regard to the two situations within the same code section. In the case of the "special" grand jury, requested by the attorney general, the court of common pleas OR a judge thereof may summon the grand jury, while in the case of a "new" grand jury, after discharge, "THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, when necessary, may order the drawing and impaneling of a new grand jury" (Emphasis added).

We respectfully submit the only possible interpretation allowed is that if the legislature had intended that a single judge of a multi-judge court of common pleas could summon a "new" grand jury, it would not have added "or any judge thereof" in connection with a "special" grand jury. "The expression of one excludes the other" was never more clearly demonstrated.

The stipulation (Appendix F) establishes that the "new" grand jury was ordered drawn by a single judge of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County, Ohio without consultation with or concurrence of the other judge.

The establishment of the procedure for calling and organizing grand juries has been left from time immemorial to the legislative body, which in order to protect the citizens from unfounded accusation has always guarded with scrupulous care the selection, return, and impaneling of such bodies. See State ex rel. Doerfler v. Price, 101 O.S. 50; Doyle v. State, 17 Ohio 222.

We therefore respectfully submit that the grand jury which returned the indictment upon which petitioner was convicted and sentenced was not a "special" grand jury under the Ohio Statute, nor was it a "new" grand jury ordered drawn after the discharge of the regular grand jury in accordance with the statute. It was, therefore never legally impaneled and was a complete nullity; thus its indictments were fully vitiated.

CONCLUSION

Your petitioner respectfully submits that the petitioner was tried, convicted, and sentenced upon an indictment returned by a grand jury which, never having been legally impaneled in the first instance, did not exist and was a nullity. As a result of this illegal procedure, the petitioner's rights have been abridged by the State of Ohio and he has been deprived of due process of law, all in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX A

IN THE COURT OF APPEALS, SCIOTO COUNTY, OHIO

STATE OF OHIO,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

vs.

JAMES O. PHIPPS,
Defendant-Appellant.

OPINION OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

(November 17, 1964)

COLLIER, P.J.

James O. Phipps, the defendant-appellant herein, and hereinafter referred to as the defendant, was indicted by the Grand Jury of Scioto County under an indictment containing three counts. The defendant was charged with using a false and fictitious name in the application for a certificate of title to a certain motor vehicle, the giving of a false and fictitious address in such application and a forgery of an assignment of a certificate of title for said motor vehicle, in violation of Section 4505.19, Revised Code.

The defendant filed separate special pleas to the indictment objecting to the jurisdiction of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County of the subject matter in the indictment, on the ground that the special grand jury which returned the indictment had no legal existence; that the order for the drawing of the special grand jury was the individual act of one judge of a two-judge court, without consultation with or concurrence of the other judge of the Common Pleas Court. These special pleas to the indictment were overruled.

The defendant then petitioned the Supreme Court of Ohio for a writ of prohibition to restrain the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County from proceeding with this cause for want of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court sustained a demurrer to defendant's petition on the ground that the defendant had an adequate remedy at law by way of appeal.

The defendant was found guilty on all three counts in a trial by jury, his motion for a new trial was overruled and the sentence of the court was imposed. The appeal on questions of law to this court followed.

The assignments of error will be considered in the order set forth in defendant's brief. In the first and second assignments of error the defendant claims the trial court erred in overruling the defendant's motions to quash the indictment and his plea in abatement to the indictment in which the defendant contended that the indictment was a nullity for the reason the order to draw the special grand jury was signed by only one of the two judges of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County.

The question presented by these two assignments of error is whether or not a single judge of a two-judge court had authority to sign the order for the drawing of the special grand jury without the concurrence of the other judge. The record shows, by stipulation, that such order was signed on June 1, 1962, by the Honorable Lowell C. Thompson, one of the two judges of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County. Section 2939.04, Revised Code, provides:

> "The Court of Common Pleas may order the drawing of a special jury to sit any time public business requires it."

and Section 2939.17, Revised Code, provides:

> "After the Grand Jury is discharged, the Court of Common Pleas, when necessary, may order the drawing and empanelling of a new Grand Jury,"

This statute unquestionably authorizes the Common Pleas Court to draw and empanel a new grand jury "when necessary", but the specific question in the case at bar is whether the concurrence of both judges of a two-judge court is necessary to render such order valid.

Section 2301.01, Revised Code, provides for a Common Pleas Court in each county to be held by one or more judges. It will be observed that the statute uses the term, "the court of common pleas". A "court" has been defined as an incorporeal political being in one or more judges to sit at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers, pursuant to lawful authority, for the administration of justice. State ex rel Hawke vs. LeBlond, 108 O. S. 126, the first syllabus of which reads:

> "1. In any county in Ohio, where more than one judge of the court of common pleas hold office, the "court of common pleas" of such county may be constituted by one or more of the common pleas judges holding office in that county, and the judges so holding office have unlimited discretion to determine the number of judges who shall preside over any session of such court."

And on page 134 of the opinion, the court says:

> "Parties to litigation have no control or voice in determining the number of Common Pleas Judges who may preside over sessions of the court, that matter being within the unlimited discretion of the judges of each county respectively."

In our opinion, the official act of an individual judge of a Common Pleas Court composed of more than one judge is the act of the court; that it was never contemplated and is not necessary that a judge of such court would be required to confer with and have the concurrence of the other judge or judges in the performance of his judicial duties. See 14

O. Jur. 2d, 444, Section 17, on the subject of Courts. The first and second assignments of error are overruled.

Under the third and fourth assignments of error the defendant claims the court erred in permitting the state to amend the indictment. It appears that in complying with a request of the defendant for a bill of particulars, the prosecuting attorney gave the number of the certificate of title to the motor vehicle as 7344469, when the correct number was 7344459. The trial court permitted an amendment, stating the correct number of the certificate. Did the court err in allowing the correction of this apparent typographical error? Section 2941.30, Revised Code, provides that the court may at any time before, during or after a trial, amend the indictment or bill of particulars in form or substance, provided no change is made in the name or identity of the crime charged. This statute is very broad and authorizes the amendment of an indictment which charges every essential element of a crime. It is only when an indictment does not contain an essential element of a crime and it is sought to supply such essential element that an indictment may not be amended. 28 O. Jur. 2d, 525, Section 101; State vs. Wozmiak, 172 O. S. 517. Neither the name or the identity of the crime was changed and the defendant could not have been prejudiced by this amendment. The transaction involved only one automobile with the same description throughout the proceedings. These assignments are overruled.

For his fifth and sixth assignments of error the defendant claims error in the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury as requested by the defendant before argument that the burden was on the State to show, where the hand writing was admitted to be by the defendant, want of authority on the part of the defendant to execute such writing. The defendant admitted the writing on the certificate but claimed he was authorized to write it.

The rule in Ohio is that in the trial of a criminal case it is not mandatory upon the trial court to give any instructions before argument. But under Section 2945.10 (E), Revised Code, if requested, special instructions, reduced to writing, are correct, pertinent and timely presented, they must be included at least in substance, in the general charge. Grosswiler v. State, 113 O. S. 46; Wertenberber vs. State, 99 O. S. 353; State vs. Barron, 170 O. S. 267. The court, in the general charge, said:

> "A false or fictitious name as used means a name knowingly used other than the one that should be on the application and used with no authority from that particular person. (Emphasis added). Obviously, if the State has not proved the above elements beyond a reasonable doubt the defendant should be acquitted on these counts."

Thus, it will be seen that the substance of defendant's request was embraced in the general charge and the defendant was not entitled to any further instructions. These assignments of error are overruled.

Under the seventh, eighth and ninth assignments of error the defendant contends the evidence in the record is not sufficient to support the verdict. The facts upon which the indictment was based, briefly stated, are that on January 18, 1961, Alex Daugherty, accompanied by Robert McKinney and Johnnie Parker, residents of Columbus, Ohio, all with criminal records, came to Portsmouth to trade a 1954 Cadillac automobile for not known by the police; that they went to the Jim Phipps Auto Sales Company used car lot, operated by the defendant, where the transaction was completed; that the certificate of title for the Cadillac automobile was transferred into the name of Carl Reynolds and that the street address stated in the certificate was fictitious.

The defendant's contention is that the Cadillac automobile was sold by him the next day to a stranger, who gave his name as Carl Reynolds; that the purchaser told the defendant he could not write and authorized the defendant to write his name and fill out the certificate. The testimony of Daugherty, McKinney and Parker, witnesses for the State, and the conflicting testimony of the defendant and his employee, Wade Fraley, as to the transaction, presented a factual question for determination by the jury. In such situation, the court may not disturb the verdict unless it clearly appears that there was a misapprehension of the facts as shown by the evidence. The jury obviously believed the testimony of the witnesses for the State and disbelieved the testimony of the defendant and his employee. The evidence adduced by the State sufficiently establishes all the essential elements of each crime charged in the indictment. These assignments of error are overruled.

In his tenth and eleventh assignments of error the defendant claims the trial court erred in permitting the Prosecuting Attorney to cross-examine the defendant on collateral matters relating to his acquaintance with Ellsworth Daugherty and his companions. The defendant admitted only a casual acquaintance with these men involved in the transaction upon which the indictment was based. The State was properly permitted to make inquiry on cross-examination of the defendant concerning other transactions, dealings and contacts with these same persons who testified that they had frequently visited defendant's used car lot and had social contacts with the defendant. We do not consider such matter as collateral. The answers elicited were relevant to the issue involved, the guilt or innocence of the defendant. In Barnett vs. State, 104 O. S. 298, on the subject of relevancy, we find this statement:

> "Any fact that makes more probable or less probable, where the probabilities are in question, renders such fact relevant as evidence, unless there be some positive, arbitrary rule declared by competent authority, such as a statute, or a long line of judicial decisions, based upon reason, to the contrary."

For other definitions of the term, see same authority. There is no merit in these assignments of error.

The eleventh and twelfth assignments of error are that the court erred in overruling the motion of the defendant in arrest of judgment on the grounds of want of jurisdiction and that the court erred in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial. Our conclusions above stated in considering the other assignments of error renders any further comment on these assignments of error unnecessary.

Having disposed of all the issues raised by the assignments of error, we conclude that the defendant had a fair trial, free from prejudicial error, and, therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Judgment Affimed.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

PART I

Amendment 14: Section 1, Clause 3: Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

PART II

Article 1, Section 10, Constitution of the State of Ohio:

(Trial of accused persons and their rights; depositions by state and comment on failure of accused to testify in criminal cases.)

Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him; and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance can not be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. (As amended Sept. 3, 1912).
